"Memories of the Holocaust in Scandinavia: Contexts, Approaches and Debates"

The interest in the Holocaust has become increasingly noticeable in the Scandinavian countries in the last decades, with a growing number not only of dissertations, monographs and other publications but also public debates and controversies relating to the Holocaust. This new upsurge of interest in the Holocaust in all Scandinavian countries reflects the dynamics and the contested nature of collective memories of wartime Scandinavia. Scholars have been analyzing the reasons and implications of this current interest in the memories of the Holocaust for some time now. However, while numerous studies have been breakthroughs at the level of national histories of individual Scandinavian countries, only a few attempts have been made to examine the region's multiple experiences of and approaches to the Holocaust vis-à-vis one another and in the context of Scandinavian history.

Scandinavian Journal of History is looking for papers which investigate the ways in which the Holocaust has been rediscovered and represented in academic writing and public debates in postwar Scandinavia. We are particularly interested in papers which address issues around the Holocaust in the Scandinavian context; is there anything "Scandinavian" in the ways in which the Holocaust and its memory have been grappled with in Scandinavia? How does the Holocaust fit in with organizing principles of Scandinavian societies such as "folkhemmet"? Why has it taken such a long time for the Scandinavian countries to start working through the Holocaust? Can we say that this is, perhaps, a "Scandinavian" phenomenon? How have the patterns of memorizing the Holocaust changed in Scandinavia in recent decades?

The manuscript must be in English, and untypically must not exceed 5,000 words. Otherwise, all submissions must observe the journal's instructions for contributors, given on their website under the section "Instructions for Authors" (<http://www.tandf.co.uk/journals/journal.asp?issn=0346-8755&linktype=44>)

Address manuscripts and illustrations to the guest editors of the issue, preferably in electronic form as e-mail attachments by 30 November 2010. Manuscripts submitted by regular mail should be accompanied by an electronic version, including images whenever possible.
